Fourth Quarter 2023 Commentary Ending December 31, 2023

Markets Review

Stocks staged a strong relief rally closing the year after the Federal Reserve (Fed) signaled the end to interest rate increases. Inflation remained stubborn in 2023 which led to longer dated interest rates rising to levels not seen since 2007. The ten year treasury topped at 5% in October despite the Consumer Price Index (CPI) finally subsiding to a 3% annual rate in June. Stocks and bonds were off to the races after the November 1st Fed meeting.

The ten year treasury rate dropped to 3.9% at the end of the year. The S&P 500 Index jumped 11.7% in the fourth quarter while small companies represented by the Russell 2000 Index were up more at 14%. The move was broad based across sectors with the S&P Information Technology Index once again the leader at 17.2%.

The strong reaction by markets in the quarter imply expectations of the Fed actually cutting rates soon in 2024. However, CPI inflation readings have bounced slightly to finish December at 3.4%. Inflation deceleration and the eventual effect from sharply higher rates will remain the story in 2024.

Portfolio Review

For the quarter ended December 31, 2023 the ALPS Global Opportunity Fund (LPEFX) increased by 13.8% compared with the primary index of Morningstar Developed Markets Index-Net of fees up 11.5%. Year to date the Fund has outperformed by 5.6%, at 28.3%.

The Fund outperformed due to very strong returns and large weighting within the financial sector. Technology stocks performed strongly within the Fund and across the broad market, however were underweighted.

The US Dollar weakened 4.8% in the quarter as the Federal Reserve signaled the end to interest rate increases. The Fund is approximately 55% foreign securities. Therefore, the dollar weakness contributed a positive 2.8% or 1.2% more than the primary benchmark.

During the fourth quarter of 2023 the Fund added two new positions and sold one name, ending with 49 positions. Positioning continues to favor broadening diversification with a higher number of positions.

Outlook

Entering 2024, consensus has been firming around the concept of an end to monetary tightening around the globe. In our view, the Federal Reserve is in a bind as fiscal spending is continuing to support inflation. However, the Fed signaled rates are sufficiently restrictive and not going higher. There is risk this posture will need to be altered and rates could stay high most of 2024. We expect the Fed won't lower rates until after several near or under 2% CPI readings. This seems more likely later in 2024.

The Congressional Budget Office (CBO) published a forecast for US budget deficit spending of 6% each year through 2031. Spending will worsen to over 7% by 2033 as Social Security benefits outspend revenue. This level of spending is traditionally temporary following times of crisis like 2008-2009. We believe this spending is not sustainable and will likely lead to ratings downgrades and subsequent bond liquidity risk if spending is not controlled. Nonetheless, the stock market continues to run up with strong corporate earnings due in part to government spending. The spending situation won't be addressed until 2025 as elections fade. Eventually, this adjustment to spending will weigh heavy on economic growth.

Expect volatility as the Fed may disappoint by failing to lower rates as quickly as expected in 2024. On the bright side, valuations have come off to appropriate levels given higher interest rates. Given expected volatility, we believe a conservative approach with high diversification and relatively stable earnings streams will be favored. Our view is that growth companies with high valuations should be avoided along with potential credit cycle victims and those firms desperate for investors such as venture capital.

Thank you for your continued support.

Certain of the Fund's investments may be exposed to liquidity risk due to low trading volume, lack of a market maker or legal restrictions limiting the ability of the Fund to sell particular securities at an advantageous price and/or time. As a result these securities may be more difficult to value. Foreign investing involves special risks such as currency fluctuations and political uncertainty. The Fund invests in derivatives and is subject to the risk that the value of those derivative investments will fall because of pricing difficulties or lack of correlation with the underlying investment.

There are inherent risks in investing in private equity companies, which encompass financial institutions or vehicles whose principal business is to invest in and lend capital to privately-held companies. Generally, little public information exists for private and thinly traded companies, and there is a risk that investors may not be able to make a fully informed investment decision.

Listed Private Equity Companies may have relatively concentrated investment portfolios, consisting of a relatively small number of holdings. A consequence of this limited number of investments is that the aggregate returns realized may be adversely impacted by the poor performance of a small number of investments, or even a single investment, particularly if a company experiences the need to write down the value of an investment.

Diversification does not eliminate the risk of experiencing investment losses.
